

Little Ocho Saves the Sea!

Written by Arden Martenz

The background is a light blue sky-like area with several white bubbles of different sizes. The bottom of the image shows a sandy ocean floor with various colorful coral reefs in shades of green, red, and pink. A large, faint watermark reading "Marco" is centered across the middle of the page, with a small yellow star positioned just below the letter 'o'.

Little Ocho sat huddled by his cave at the bottom of the sea.

“Little Ocho?” his mother called. “What are you doing here? I thought you were going out to play with the other boy and girl sea creatures.”

“Not today,” said Little Ocho. “Not today or any day! My friends are not acting the way they use to act. They are being mean and doing awful things to each other.”

I heard Sheldon say ...

‘I won’t, and you can’t make me!
Nobody else has to do what you make me do. I hate you!’ ”

“And Cindy Crab and Cora Crab were so busy fighting with each other they didn’t even know I was near them.”

“I will give each of my eight tentacles a name.
I will name them the different ways that my sea friends should behave.

One will be caring,
another will be sharing,
and the others will be cooperative,
honest,
tolerant,
respectful,
trustworthy,
and responsible.”

“That will be a good starting point. But how can I get my friends to believe me? I need something really clever!”

Little Ocho thought and thought ...

Leon Lobster sat on his rock, chuckling to himself.

“That Little Ocho!” he thought. “Special tentacles? I don’t think so!

“Little Ocho was just smart enough to think of a way to get all of us back to being what we wanted to be all along ... FRIENDS!”

What's My Temperature?

Below are pictures of eight thermometers. Each thermometer stands for a good behavior. Look at each thermometer and think about your own behavior. If you believe your behavior is perfect, color in the thermometer from the bottom to the top. If you think you could improve your behavior, color in the thermometer from the bottom to how you believe you act at this time.

NAME _____

Sea Creatures Positive Behaviors

The sea creatures in Little Ocho's community had eight different positive behaviors. When each of the behaviors were used, the community was a peaceful place in which to live. Draw a line from the positive behavior to the sea creature to whom it belongs.
